This is an oak vein that combines the characteristics of natural oak.

The relaxed mountain vein and the unique small shadow vein of oak are intertwined.

The unique wooden node and EIR technology bring more natural texture to this design.

The overall layout maintains the original and unique shades of contrast, and some wood knots are added to more truly show the oak temperament. The straight vein is clean and neat, and the mountain vein is undulating. Combined with the technology of EIR, the vein is more concave and convex, which is real and natural.

The designer made a soft transition between the clear and smooth large mountain vein of the oak and the natural wood scarring and cracks, so that the entire layout is more balanced and harmonious. EIR technology makes the oak full of solid wood texture, bringing a double shock of vision and touch. The natural color of the original wood allows this oak to have a wider range of decoration styles.

The material is hickory, and the color difference between the core material and the sapwood is cleverly used. The combination of red-brown and wood color can highlight its rich sense of hierarchy and high-end. Whether it is modern simplicity, light luxury or simple European style, this color can easily collocation.

In order to show the nobility and elegance of pine, the designer deliberately weakened the cracks and knots on the wood. However, the strong contrast between the shades and the shallow horizontal stripes makes the layout more three-dimensional. Small cracks are also perfectly integrated into the undulating dark gray mountain vein, creating a vintage atmosphere with a sense of age.
